nisha mody

Values

Prep

1. Make a list of your 5-7 of your core values from the next page and list them here: (feel free to add your own, choose something in another language, or think of a visual image). This doesn't have to be perfect. Your values can always change.

2. I like to think of values as remembrances of our worth. Write affirmations for each value to help you remember your worth. Start each affirmation with "I am..." or "I verb..." For example, if my value is compassion, my affirmation can be "I am compassionate toward my body, my mind, and my spirit". OR "I hug myself to remind myself that I am soft."

3. Find 3 things that bring you back into your worth (objects, songs, somatic practices, poems, essays, books, movies, etc). List them here. I invite you to share them at our in person meeting.

nisha mody

VALUES

Accountability
Achievement
Adaptability
Adventure
Altruism
Ambition
Authenticity
Balance
Beauty
Belonging
Caring
Clarity Collaboration
Comfort Commitment Communication
Community
Compassion Competence Confidence
Connection
Contentment
Cooperation
Courage
Creativity
Curiosity
Discernment
Disrupting the norm
Diversity
Ease
Efficiency
Emotional expression
Equality
Equity
Ethics
Excellence
Fairness
Faith
Family
Forgiveness
Freedom
Friendship
Fulfillment
Fun
Generosity
Grace
Gratitude
Growth
Harmony
Health
Home
Honesty
Hope
Humility
Humor
Imagination
Inclusion Independence
Initiative
Integrity
Intelligence
Interdependence
Intuition
Job security
Joy
Justice
Kindness
Knowledge
Leadership
Learning
Legacy
Liberation
Love
Loyalty
Nature
Non-Violence
Openness
Optimism
Order
Patience
Peace
Perseverance
Power
Pride
Prosperity
Recognition Reliability
Resourcefulness Responsibility
Respect
Responsibility
Rest
Safety
Satisfaction
Security
Self-discipline
Self-expression
Serenity
Service
Simplicity
Spaciousness
Spirituality
Success
Teamwork
Time
Tradition Transformation
Travel
Trust
Truth
Understanding
Unlearning
Uniqueness Usefulness
Vision
Vulnerability
Wealth
Wellness
Wholeheartedness
Wisdom

nisha mody

During Session

1. What is the relationship between those values and work? Is it a generative relationship? A conflicting one? Both?

2. What influences whether or not it is generative? (e.g. not having capacity, being around toxic people, capitalism, etc)

3. Consider your current or past work in relation to a job. What are the spoken and unspoken values of your workplace and/or profession? How are these values connected or disconnected to your values?

During Session

4. What can you imagine, as Anne Helen Petersen says in the quote below, that supports you in work being "very much worth doing"? Consider how you can start with your values. For example, if your value was unlearning, you could imagine creating art that explores this concept or asking for help / joining a community when someone questions something you have unlearned, etc.

"The Librarians Are Not Okay" by Anne Helen Petersen

So yes, in sum, the librarians are not okay. But you are also very much not alone. So many others have found their professions mired in this downward spiral of burnout and exhaustion, but also, on a deeper level, of demoralization, inequity, and exclusion. But there is hope for a different, sustainable way forward: as individuals, as institutions, as communities. But it hinges, absolutely, on the will to imagine it. The work is hard. But the work is hard because, in this moment, more than ever — it is so very much worth doing.

Notes

nisha mody